

Create#5 // Found Faces by Jacqui Campbell

Visual thinking, imagination and photograph to reveal the hidden faces of the village

You will need

- Either a camera with which to take photos of the faces you find
- Or something to jot down a line or two about them

Found Faces

The eye loves order and looks for form in random patterns.

The face is an image we often seek out and this playful activity opens our eyes to the suggestion of faces in unexpected places.

We'll discover fragments that, if we allow, will grow in our minds into complete images.

Ideally, you'll take photos of the faces - but if that's not possible, jot down a few words about them - a smile on a gate post, the sleepy-eyed elm; either way, please do share them with us.

Activity

- Take your camera out for a wander around the village.
- You are looking out for fragments of faces.
- Most of us think about gnarly faces in trees, they're a good starting point.
- Once you're tuned into looking, you'll start to see them everywhere: farm equipment, gateposts and walls are good places to look.
- All the images in this activity are from my walk in Ousden. Can you see the faces? They're not that obvious.
- Take photos of the faces you find and share your favourites with us.
- Email them as large or full-size images so that we can post them in our online gallery.
- Or email us a line or two about the faces.
- Let's see which village reveals the strangest local characters.

Don't forget to send us photos or a brief description of your found faces so that we can share them with everyone on our blog site.
